SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 3, 1885.

The obedience to the new Sunday liquor law in New York seems to be quite general.

The garment of Injured Innocence does not seem to fit the graceful form of Ferdinand Ward.

If F. Ward really could a tale unfold about the perfidy of his pals he would be apt to roll it out.

It seems that Mr. Halstead has been the great American letter writer for well-nigh a century.

Why will people persist in calling a picnic a "lete champagne"? What is our English language for?

It is not likely that a plan will ever be devised that will make hanging pleasant to the murderer or an agreeable spectacle to the witnesses.

Journalistic unpleasantness of the most virulent type exists and abounds in Cincinnati. Its eruptions are exceedingly unpleasant to the public and are doing nobody any good.

Abner L. Frazier, of Cincinnati, president of the Ohio State Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and Children calls for a convention of all persons interested in humane work in Ohio, at Columbus, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 20 and 21. A large representation should attend from this city.

Harper's Weekly's editorials in favor of the election of the republican ticket in New York are pleasant reading than was found in the same place last year. The editor has discovered that the worst foes to reform are in the democratic party. He ought to have known it twenty-five years ago—to say nothing of one year ago.

Webster, recently convicted of murder in the first degree, for the second time, at Warren, Ohio, stoutly maintains his innocence and there seems to be a reasonable doubt in the minds of the large number of people conversant with the evidence and circumstances, of his guilt. He is, therefore, a worthy woman, is persecuted that her lover is unjustly convicted, and is overwhelmed, very naturally, with grief.

The cartoon which appears in the Cincinnati Enquirer of last Sunday is opening the eyes of some people. It is entitled "Vine street as the prohibitionists (republicans) would have it look." It depicts everything in a very deplorable, tumble-down shape. Under the picture it says: "Vote the democratic ticket. Vote with the party that has set its face against prohibition, and bury the janitor of the old party." All wise people are beginning to see (most of them saw long ago) that a vote for Dr. Leonard will be just simply a vote to put the Enquirer's free whisky party in power. The republicans have made great inroads upon the prohibitionists during the past few days, as the fruit of such expressions as this from the Enquirer and of the close and friendly alliance between Hensley and the prohibition leaders.

The Primal Industry—Organized Emigration.

Man at his best, as he came, pure and perfect, from the hand of his creator, found himself in a garden, surrounded by flowers and fruits and animals of various sorts, with all the comforts of life, except gas and newspapers, and a few other things we might mention. These he would have got on very well without if he had behaved himself properly, and we infer from all we have been able to learn from Hebrew history, the testimony of the rocks and things, and the trend of events and opinions, from Paradise to Paris, London and Chicago, that had he been faithful in his allegiance to his divine father, and kept his hand from the forbidden fruit, he would have been in Eden today and forever, growing throughout the ages in noble qualities and attributes, and approaching in character and beauty the graces and proportions of the divine model.

Man at his second best, when he had shown his humane qualities and frailties by disobedience to God, became a farmer, and proceeded to coax out of the soil, by honest but laborious industry, those fruits of the ground which at the first sprang spontaneously and luxuriously to meet the eye and the palate.

It was only when people became very bad that cities were invented and unfortunate people were crowded into them. Then came indigestion, headaches, fevers and epidemic scourges, with liquor saloons, corner loafers, ward bumpers, book agents and dead-beats; and it will be only when people grow better and wiser that they will go back to first principles and seek in the cultivation of the soil that sort of life and sustenance which restore and ennoble and tend to bring man back to his first and best estate.

One little bit of good fruit that has been borne by the bad tree of any hard times has been the forcing from the work-shops of hundreds of stalwart, strong-armed men to the broad fields of the south, west and northwest, to find in agricultural pursuits health, independence and a generous subsistence. We need not here go into detail nor undertake to show how these men, with very little money capital, but with great pluck, perseverance and well-directed energy, are entering upon a new, better and more prosperous life for themselves and are serving, also, as good citizens to build up the great wastes of the interior of the continent into the grand and measureless empire of the future. Uncle Sam sells to each son who wishes it, a good farm for much less than the price of one of Patti's songs, and the man who has a thousand dollars ahead—on a western farm—make himself independent for life in a year's time. And men with much less than the sum named can begin life anew on government or railway land, and in a few years be their own men, as independent and as happy as De Foë made out Robinson Crusoe to be.

These suggestions are purely disinterested—made solely and utterly in the interests of men whose condition in the crowded towns, as the employees of great corporations, is unsatisfactory and unprofitable to themselves. They are a good class of citizens and to the people of the city in which they live their exodus, in any large numbers, would be a calamity, but they have, nevertheless, the right of self-protection and the natural, God-given privilege of trying to promote their own welfare.

We are inclined to consider with much favor the plans now employed for sending such men and their families as wish to go, out in groups, with a good representation of those industries which go hand in hand with agricultural pursuits—men to build their houses, or to make their clothes and shoes, or to supply them with the manufactured and imported products necessary to their subsistence and comfort. But enterprises of this sort need very wise, careful and close management, and it they do not have it are in danger of a disastrous end. Men must make a good selection of land, climate and companions.

It seems to us that these suggestions may be made especially useful to young men of energy and enterprise. General Keifer and Mr. Bowman, of this city, have purchased large tracts of land in Kansas and Nebraska and have sent their sons out to manage and cultivate them, with very good results. The young men are finding health, strength and development and the great primal industry which they have entered upon, and are carving out sure and generous fortunes. These young men had not the spur of personal need to inspire them to effort, but they had the laudable desire to do something in the world and for the world, and they are doing it. What they do from choice those who are engaged in fighting the grim wolf of want from the door, can do, on a smaller scale, in their pursuit of food and clothes.

It would be well if we had large and strong companies, composed of well-to-do men who were public-spirited and philanthropic, which could aid in moderate circumstances who wished to take up land and cultivate the soil by loaning them funds for a year or so as needed, until they could raise crops and return the money.

A Case Not Beyond Help.

Dr. M. H. Hinsdale, Kenosha, Ill., advises us of a remarkable cure of Consumption. He says: "A neighbor's wife was attacked with violent lung disease, and pronounced beyond help from Quick Consumption. As a last resort, the family was persuaded to try DR. W. H. HALL'S BALM FOR THE LUNGS. To the astonishment of all, by the time she had used one-half dozen bottles she was about the house doing her own work."

TWO HEAVY FAILURES.

NEW YORK HOURS GO UNDER FOR FOUR MILLIONS.

William Heath, Broker and Broker, and H. N. Smith, a Bear Operator, Succumb to Circumstances—Smith Hopeful of soon retreating on the West Again.

(From Morning Edition.)

New York, Oct. 2.—William Heath, banker and broker at 78 Broadway, has failed, as has also H. N. Smith, one of the largest bear operators. The liabilities of Heath cannot fall short of $1,800,000. The assets are unknown. Smith's liabilities cannot fall short of $2,000,000. His assets are supposed to be nominal. Smith says he hopes to be on his feet again very soon. Smith was the owner of the famous trotting mare, Goldsmith Maid, whose death occurred about a week ago.

PROHIBITION AND SALVATION.

Struggle for the Market Square Audience, and Both Win.

(From Morning Edition.)

A band of music, or any unusual noise on Market square, will always attract a large audience. And it is always an enthusiastic audience, ripe for fun and quick to laugh at or applaud any sharp point or brilliant idea, clothed in anecdote.

Last night the Salvation Army, sixty strong in ranks, marched the streets with their usual mixture of instrumental accompaniments, and attracted a large crowd on the market square. Timely to the hour of the demonstration of the prohibitionists put in an appearance on the square with a drum corps and other things, and received the crowd as it dissolved after the Salvation exercises.

Fifty or sixty persons marched in procession, and surrounded the stand on the square. On the stand was a beautiful white satin banner, upon which was perched a white pigeon, arranged by the ladies in a paralytic attempt to fly away. This banner was formally presented to the Leonard guards by Mr. Mary A. Cummins, of this city, in a very touching address, full of womanly tenderness and evident sincerity, with an appeal to the guards for protection to the homes from the ravages of the liquor traffic. The banner was accepted in behalf of the club by the ardent young president in a very appropriate speech in which there were no serious allusions worthy of notice, except that there was no allusion made to the effect that the speaker would be surprised if he should be elected to congress. This may have been a delicacy, however, and as such may be cited to his credit.

When Rev. E. L. Eaton, of Wisconsin, was introduced to the people of Ohio what they should do on a local question, a glance over the audience showed many familiar faces of well known democrats of the city who had evidently assembled to hear the prohibitionists get their usual drubbing, and also to take away the speaker's prohibition friends were making the best use of the democratic campaign money.

Rev. Eaton, of Wisconsin, made the very best speech of the campaign for prohibition yet made in Springfield. He evidently had received a thorough training in the change of tactics by the prohibitionists, or has not yet grown entirely beyond good sound training when a youth, as he confessed to have been raised by a radical republican father, who, by the way, is a republican still, in Wisconsin. Uncle Abe Lincoln from a strong arraignment of Gov. Foster, Bill Gilson and other republicans as men guilty of exposing the evils of the liquor traffic in Ohio into the scattering crowd, but a good number stand to hear the venerable Uncle Abe through.

The only point of unusual interest in the meeting was when Rev. Eaton, of Wisconsin, said that the republicans could never elect another president. A long and derisive laugh went up from the crowd, which came very near being discouraging, but was checked in time, and the speaker continued as if nothing had happened.

THE MIAMI COUNTY FAIR.

A Big Demonstration at the Grounds by Whiteley, Fessler & Kelly.

(From Morning Edition.)

Yesterday was the last day of the Miami county fair, which has been held this week at Troy, and it was a memorable day both for the people of that county and for the firm of Whiteley, Fessler & Kelly, of this city. During the three days of the fair this firm sold on the grounds thirty-seven champion machines, including reapers, mowers and binders, and yesterday after the machines had been delivered, the purchasers hitched their horses to them, and then falling into line, and headed by Foreman's band, of this city, marched around the race track. The sight was a magnificent one and was witnessed by one of the largest crowds ever in attendance at the Miami county fair.

The fair itself was the best in all departments that has ever been held in that county, and received the patronage from the people that it deserved.

At noon an elegant dinner was served at the expense of Whiteley, Fessler & Kelly at the grounds to over two hundred old and new customers of the Champion in Miami county. The feast, which was complete in all its details, was gotten up by the ladies of the First Presbyterian church. After the dinner, William N. Whiteley was completely surprised by the presentation to him on behalf of the purchasers, old and new, of the Champion machines, of a case appropriately engraved. It is prized very highly by its recipient.

In the evening the crowd wound up the festivities by going to the hall to hear General Beaver make a republican speech. Mr. Whiteley says the farmers of Miami county are as enthusiastic republicans as they are Champion men. He also says that since it was decided to build the two hundred thousand dollar house at Troy, the town has taken a big boom, and business is getting better and the people more hopeful every day.

The Bee Line Excursion.

To the Editor of the GLOBE-REPUBLIC:

An error has occurred concerning the excursion to Cincinnati next Monday, which is justice to Mr. Knight should be explained.

The arrangement was made at my office Thursday evening, at 6 o'clock, for the guards to go to Cincinnati on the Bee Line at 10 o'clock Monday, and Mr. Knight advertised it in your paper, this morning, in good faith. But at the meeting of the club last evening, for various reasons, it was voted to have the guards go on the Pan Handle excursion, which was not present at the meeting, and through some inadvertence Mr. Knight was not informed of the fact till too late to prevent the publication of his notice.

I deem this explanation to be due him, as it was through no fault of his that the incorrect statement was published. His excursion will go at 10 o'clock, city time, as published. The only difference is that the guards will not go on that train. Yours respectfully,

E. S. THOMSON,

Chairman Committee.
